<td>The victim was worried about her safety in the weeks leading up to the homicide, because she was sexually assaulted. The murderer was a man the victim met online and started to date for a short time. The murderer confessed that he “dispatched” Bates by strangling her with his hands. He allegedly moved her body to the floor and saw it “jump.” He told police he did not want her to “come back,” so he took a folding knife from a hutch and stabbed Bates several times, according to the charges. Bates' cause of death was complex homicidal violence, with four stab wounds to the torso and one to the left side of the neck. The victim also had broken ribs, and the hyoid bone in her throat was loosened, a sign of strangulation.</td>

After the attack she was taken to the Kathmandu Medical College hospital, from where she was referred to Teaching hospital and again she was referred to Bir hospital. Because of shifting from one hospital to another she could not get treatment in time and died. Activists claim that the shifting from one hospital to another had to do with transphobia. They also did organize a protest and tried to file a complaint at the police, but they never get a report and the case was dismissed.</td>

Remarks: The victim was in police custody and was brought to a hospital, where she died. Civil liberties organizations alleged that the victim died after she was tortured by the police and have demanded a judicial inquiry. Police authorities made wild allegations against the deceased in a bid to discredit him and hush up the case. They argued that the victim was ‘a vagabond after he lost his parents when he was a teenager and had even become a eunuch.’ Newspapers reported, that this takes the total count of custodial deaths in the police station to four in the last two years.
